Professor Phil Levine has just begun a year-long sabbatical from teaching to be a special assistant in foreign relations to a Washington senator when tensions heat up with Iran. Does Iran have nuclear capabilities? Was a coup attempted on the Iranian government? What will Israel's response be?

At the same time, Phil's wife takes a job teaching high-risk Washington, DC, students. Gang violence is a constant threat, yet Phil meets some extraordinary men who are making a difference in curbing the hostility. They have discovered a code of concrete principles to lessen violence. If gang members can learn to get along and reduce brutality, could these same principles be applied on a broader scale to achieve worldwide peace?

Author Sidney Rosen, through a backdrop of politics, raises questions about the quest for peace personally, locally, and nationally in this work of fiction as fresh as today's news.
